

A black and white line drawing of a spider web. The web is a classic orb-weaver design with a central point from which eight radial lines extend outwards. Between these radial lines are concentric, slightly irregular circular lines that form the spiral of the web. A small, dark spider is positioned near the center of the web, facing towards the bottom right. The entire drawing is contained within a square frame, with the web's edges touching the corners of the frame.

A black and white line drawing of a spider web. The web is circular with a central point from which eight radial lines extend outwards. Between these radial lines are concentric, wavy lines that form the spiral of the web. In the lower right quadrant, a small spider is positioned on one of the radial lines, facing towards the center. The entire drawing is composed of simple black outlines on a white background.
